This is Billy as a young man in 1959, welcoming me into the world here with my dad and theirs. My memories of him will always be of his voice and laugh. All the Williams boys were storytellers, but Billy had perfected the art. They would share stories that would usually begin with, "I remember this one old gal that lived outside Thomasville..." and would then describe some tale of human foible humorous behaviour. Billy might tell one about someone they knew who's kid burned down the house trying to cook a peach pie in his little sisters Easy Bake Oven. Uncle Jimmy would then interject that this sounded like something Gene would have done. Then my Dad would remind them both that Billy never had to make his own pie because he was always Mom Williams' favorite - she gave him pie whenever he wanted. These skills no doubt made him the consummate insurance salesman. I imagine he would have loved his own parting story. Proof to everyone he ever sold a policy that there was truth in every story. I'm sorry I couldn't make it to Tallahassee today to share and hear a few more stories about my uncle Bill. He will be fondly remembered. Peace.

The first grand baby and we were all thrilled! I'll always remember my little brother-in-law as a funny, droll, witty guy who loved a good story.
