“ James was a pleasure to know, always smiling, cheerful, jovial, and such a pleasant jokester. I will miss James and how he liked to pick on me about the Gators and how I enjoyed doing the same with him about the Seminoles. Always very knowledgeable about the Gospel of Jesus Christ, so much, when I was the Instructor for our Gospel Doctrine Class, he became one of our best students, always participating, and sharing his thoughts as well as input toward Sunday's particular lesson. James had many talents and one of them was an excellent carpenter. I understand his heart was one of such he would provide carpentry service to individuals who could not afford to have repairs done.

James was always a joy to be around, and his spirit is one I am grateful to call my friend.

My wish to his wife, Kim, her children, Grandchildren, and James' children, Grandchildren, and the entire Barber family, is for you to please accept my wish to express sincere condolences due to his loss. I do understand the importance of remembering and honoring a life well lived, and James' was such.

"Please know that grief is the natural by-product of love. One cannot selflessly love another person and not grieve at his suffering or eventual death. The only way to avoid the grief would be to not experience the love; and it is love that gives life its richness and meaning."
