

Jane Alice Stieber Grosslight

November 22, 1930 - July 23, 2014

Jane Alice Stieber Grosslight, born November 22, 1930, Philadelphia, PA, died, following a brief illness, July 23, 2014 in Tallahassee, FL. Jane earned her Bachelors of Science, Psychology from Penn State University, where she met and married Joseph Henry Grosslight. The family lived in Kent, OH before relocated to Tallahassee in 1967 where she earned her Masters of Science from Florida State University. Jane worked with Continuing Education at Florida State University. Those who knew Jane understood retirement was never an option. She owned Durwood Publishers, working until her death as a lighting designer, publishing many award winning books, articles and speaking nationally on the subject.

Jane enjoyed family, cooking, academic inquiry, funny comics, and generally being active and engaged in life. Her breadth of knowledge on numerous topics was impressive. London was her favorite city. She was thrilled to give personal tours and arranged trips for family, friends and colleagues. She was a member of the Rotary Club of Tallahassee, Illuminating Engineering Society among others.

Jane is survived by her sons Kenneth Russell (Susan) of Blythewood, SC and James Theodore, of Raleigh, NC, grandsons Russell Joseph and Robert Hammond, both of Blythewood, SC and sister Sally Ann Stieber, of Coatesville, PA. She was predeceased by her parents, Theodore Ernest Stieber and May Louise Rommel, and her husband.

“ Jane and I decided we would get up at 3:00 a.m. and go and see the shooting stars. Jane packed some hot cider and gathered some blankets and we drove to some field where there was little or no tree cover. We got there and pulled out the blanket and had some cider and waited for the show to start. Surprising to us both was that someone else picked out spot and was there watching and waiting for nature to amaze us. We were like two little kids. Judy Melcher
